FALSE FRUITS AND FLOWERS.

They Mutely Deceive the Unwary Victor in Gorgeous City Palaces.

The making of artificial flowers has been carried to most deceiving lengths. Seldom does a week pass but what Billy Edwards, at the Hoffman House, has to decide a bet as to the Hollman House, has to decide a bet as to whether the vines, with their apparently luscious clusters of grapes, which cling to the frame and gas jets around one of the big pictures are real or not, and visitors, who are not countrymen by any means, always insist that the ivy which hangs in luxurious masses on the wall near the eight, stand is genuine.

Then, explanatorily, he added the two words: "Noxious vapors."

He wasn't such a very great painter, after all, who painted fruit so that he deceived the but flowers."

York and Manhattan Athletic Clubs-The Country Club's Steeplechast-A Coming Amateur-Professional Bout with the Gloves-McLaughlin on Saturday's Loss. UR big amatuer athletic clubs, the Man-York, are at cross purposes again. The present hard feeling is caused by the resignation of W. C. Dohm, the crack Princeton runner, from a membership of less than a week in the Cherry Diamond Club, and his immediate reception into the New York Athletic Club. It is claimed that the New York Athletic Club made propositions to young Dohm in the very noment of his triumph in the quarter-mile run on turf at the games at Oedarhurst, which was the first proof of any remarkable form he had given, offering him a place on the team just organized for a trip to England.

Fashionable society, which is notoriously sportive, will attend the Country Club's grand steeplechases at Pelham to day, and on Friday, in a body. There will be six races to-day. Two important additions have been made to the programmes printed by the morning papers. The first race to-day, a maiden polo pony flat race, will have a fine cup added, and the third race, a hunter's lightweight steeplechase, is a $20 sweepstakes as well as for the ladies' cup. The sports at Cedarhurst have whetted the appetites of the lovers of races over timber, with the dangers of a few stone walls and water jumps thrown in. umps thrown in.

The New York Athletic Club is said to have held out the olive branch to the Manhattans by sending in an official list of entries for the Memorial Day games of the latter organization. The fifteen-round glove contest which takes place in Boston to-night between John L. The British Amateur Association permitted the amateur champion, Hill, to box the professional, Laxon, without detriment to the amateur's standing, for this very purpose.

John A. Stevens and his comedy drama, "A Narrow Escape," have been secured by Manager Hart for the Theatre Com'que, Harlem, this week. The company comes from Washington, where it is and to have met with success. It includes John A. Stevens himself, Henry Holland, Fred Lennox, Hudson Liston, charming hule Muss Minute Dupree, was Ethel Lytton, Miss Georgie Diokson and Miss Marion Russell.

Marion Russell.

"The Queen's Mate" is crowding the new Broadway Theatre. The tuneful, catchy music and the delightful, bell-like voice of Miss Lillian Russell are, of course, the principal features, and they are "hosts in themselves." The march has made a decided hit. Alrogether Manager Duff is pleased at the way the public have shown their approval of this costly effort.

Louis James and Miss Marie Wainwright will be at the Academy of Music to-night to fill one week's euragement there, after which the flist season of that theatre as a combination house will close. Mr. James and Miss Wainwright will present a reperiore including "Ingomar," ""Virginius" and "Othello." There will be a special Memorial Day maticée.

and "Othello," There will be a special Memorial Day matiaée.

"A Possible Cave," Sydney Rosenfeid's brightly attractive play, enters upon the last week of its season t-oight at the Madison Square Theatre, Manager little tentrely satisfied with its success. It has filled the Madison Square Theatre during the past four week, and its frie ds and admirers will doubtless turn out to bid it farewell for the present.

The renting of the Thalia Theatre by Manager H. Jacobs, as shown by last week's Duniness, has proved a profitable undertaking. This week "True Irita Heatrs" will be given at that homeo, There will be matinases to-day, Wednesday and Saturday.

'Lost in New York, with its 60,000 gallons of real water, will be at the Lee Avenue Academy of Music this week. There is, some very realistic secrety in this play. Of course the river scene, with its steamboat and other craft, will be the most conspicuous feature.

Frank Mayo will be at the Amphion Academy toginh. He will present the "Royal Guard" during rish. He will present the 'Noyal Guard' during the week, except on Friday evening and at the Wednesday and Saturiay mathices, when 'Nor deck' will be the attraction. Next week a new play by P. S. Munro, called '- Parvenues," will be made known at this nouse.

THE NIGHT OF THE FIRE.

sir, this instant, and never dare to enter my sir, this instant, and never dare to enter my house again upon such an errand!" exclaimed Source Brandon at last. Squire Brandon as after listening in speechless amazement to the modest demand of Frank Everott, the young organist of the village church, for the hand of his only child—his Florence—whose graceful, golden head he had resolved should wear the coronet of his old friend and neighbor, Lord Mere-worth. worth.

"Confound his impudence!" muttered the irste old Squire, as after thus abruptly dismissing the presumptuous young organist, he entered the breakfast-room, where Florence, looking radiantly beautiful in her pure white morning robe—her sweet, Madonna face shaded by luxuriant tresses of that dim yet lustrous gold-dust color which the grand old masters so loved to paint—was seated behind the antique silver breakfast service, awaiting her father's superpasse.

masters so loved to paint—was seated behind the antique silver breakfast service, awaiting her father's appearance.

"What is the matter, papa?" she inquired, looking up as the Equire entered the room.

"Matter enough, child!" answered the old Squire. "Things have come to a pretty pass when a pennuless rascal like young Everett has the unblushing effrontery to come to me with a modest request for the hand of my daughter. This comes of your fancy for learning the organ," he continued. "If it had not been for these confounded music lessons"—

"Hush, papa!" said Florence, quietly, her eyes fixed intently upon the white tablecloth before her, and a faint blush stealing over her face: "Frank Everett is a gentleman."

"Gantleman, indeed!" recorted the Equire, angrily. "Fine gentleman, truly! Son of some half-starved curste! And hark ye, girl. I have put an end to these music lessons and forbidden the young puppy to ever enter my house sgain. If Mereworth likes to allow it when you are his wife, well and good: but I'll have no more of it under my roof."

I shall never be Lord Mereworth's wife, papa," said Florence, in a quiet but deter-mined tone.

AND REAL PROPERTY AND PROPERTY OF THE PROPERTY

Frank, who had been writing in his room, rushed into the street, and bounded with the speed of an arrow over the old stone bridge and up the hill towards the court.

"Water!" was the cry from a hundred lips; but alas! a foot of hard, solid ice covered the river, and though a score of axes were at work in a moment to set free the imprisoned waters, long before the first bucket of the precious fluid could reach the summit of the hill it was evident that the fire head made such master, over the burning. summit of the hill it was evident that the fire had made such mastery over the burning building that all efforts to arrest its progress would be hopeless.

In a few moments the face of Florence Brandon appeared at one of the bedroom windows. Frank, who, not knowing whether the inmates of the house had escaped, had been anxiously looking for her among the crowd, immediately recognized the pale yet firm face, and, throwing off his cost, seized as are, and with a few blows breaking open the caken hall door, dashed madly up the broad staircase, in spite of the smoke and fiame which enveloped him.

After several vain attempts he at last opened

After several vain attempts he at last opened the door of the Squire's bedroom, and there, seated on the side of the bed, pale, but calm, holding her father's hand between her own, was the object of his search.

"Oh, Frank, save him! Save papa!" she exclaimed, springing up and seizing his outstretched hands. "He brike his leg a week ago, and cannot walk," she whispered hurriedly, as, heedless of her entreaties, Frank was carrying her from the room.

"And you, Florence?" replied Frank, releasing his hold and looking steadily into her face.

"I'll wait here till you come back, dear." she whispered: "and if you sh uid be too late, Frank, we shall meet again in heaven. But, oh! if you love me, save papa."

Approaching the bed, Frank lifted the half, unconscious form of the Squire in his arms, and with one last, lingering look at Florence, passed swittly from the room.

Not a moment too soon—for, almost before he reached the ground floor, the staircase came down with a crash which shook the whole house, and filed the hall with smoke and sparks.

A cheer greeted our hero as he bore the holding her father's hand between her own,

But the task was more difficult than he had anticipated. The stair ase was already gone: and as he stood looking for some other way of entrance, part of the front of the house came down, almost at his feet, and for a few moments the whole build ng was enveloped in thick, impenetrable volumes of smoke.

Then with an actifity that would have the roof fell in and all that remained of moments the whole building was enveloped in thick, impenetrable volumes of smoke.

Then, with an agility that would have done hold before he reached the level of the room in which he half unconscions form of the Squire in his sams, and with one last, lingering look at Florence, passed swiftly from the room.

Not a moment too soon—for, almost before he reached the ground floor, the staircase came down with a crash which shook the whole house, and filed the half whole house, and filed the half whole house, and filed the half whole house, and rushed our ferror who has seven be reached the ground floor, the staircase into the blazing abyss beneath—and by a mighty effort he swung himself on the floor of the Squire down from under his sinking feet into the blazing abyss beneath—and by a mighty effort he swung himself on the floor of the Squire down from under his sinking feet into the blazing abyss beneath—and by a mighty effort he swung himself on the floor of the Squire down from the squire and sparks.

A cheer greeted our hero as he bore the Squire down the stone steps in front of the door, and resigning his burden to the care of the crowd, he immediately prepared to return for Florence.

the bed, Frank prepared to lower her from the window.

One kiss—the first and last—one last, long,
fond look—and the fair young girl was gently descending, guided by the firm hand of her lover.

Scarcely had she rea hed the ground when the roof fell in, and all that remained of Brandon Court was a heap of blazing ruins, underneath which lay the body of the hero who had saved the lives of its immates at the expense of his own.
